Participating in galley duty is an essential component of being a Tour du Canada rider. Galley crew roles are assigned, based on skills and preferences. All galley crew members have a joint responsibility on galley duty but performing different roles makes the work go more smoothly. Please note that about one-third of dinners in the menu plan are vegetarian dishes. On those nights it's a vegetarian-only kitchen. For dinners where meat, poultry or fish is served there will also be a vegetarian option.

Memo to Prospective Tour du Canada Riders About Galley Duty

The Tour du Canada Concept

Whenever we talk about Tour du Canada, we stress the importance of co-operation. We know from long experience that galley duty is essential to that spirit. Tour du Canada riders become part of a close-knit community. You live together and share the chores. Respond to fellow riders in the way that you would like them to respond to you. Be tolerant when someone is having a bad day, because you too will have your share of challenges. Nowhere is this ethic more important than in sharing responsibility for galley duty. If you come together as teams, you will be well fed. This note is intended to give you the basics on galley duty and some practical tips on making meal times memorable.

Galley Duty Defined

Have you heard the Tour du Canada joke about the difference between Heaven and Hell — in Hell the cooks fix the bikes and the mechanics prepare the meals.

Galley duty has two meanings — to cook and to clean. Both are important roles and all are responsible for cooking and cleaning.

Let's face it, though. Each of us has a different set of skills and it's best for all to use those skills to best advantage.

You want someone who is mechanically inclined to help others in ensuring that bikes are roadworthy.

And you want someone with food sense in charge of the spice rack.

The challenge is to share the load fairly.

Crew Chief/Staff Liaison

Each galley crew member has a responsibility for ensuring that chores are done. A crew chief role is to watch for gaps in galley routine — in effect, quality control for meals and clean-up.

A basic aspect of this role is liaison with staff in managing the food inventory. The goal is to have only one person in each crew dealing with staff to avoid crossed messages.

Someone who is a good cook should not be crew chief. Let cooks manage meal preparation and have someone else make the lists of what is needed for the galley.

That means discussing the planned menu and shopping list two or three days before your crew's turn at galley duty because staff plans ahead in collecting the necessary ingredients.

Galley Crew Assignments

At the Orientation session in Vancouver, the first order of business will be meetings of galley crew members.

Riders are assigned to galley crews and the goal is to find the best use of everyone's skills.

Depending on total group size, we have three to six people in each crew. With less than six in a crew, the roles will be combined in order to cover staff liaison, the clean-up jobs and the vegetarian/salad job.

Often, a galley crew role lasts all summer. But responsibilities can be reassigned as long as there is advance consultation with staff.

Division of Labour

Sharing the load for galley duty involves more than just figuring who is a good cook.

Dinner Cook: Obviously a key role because dinner is such a social meal.

Breakfast Cook: Some argue that breakfast is the most important meal. It's not as social as dinner but it is the meal that gives you a head-start on the day.

Dinner Clean-up Leader: With one person in charge of getting the pots cleaned, all galley crew members will be done sooner.

Breakfast Clean-up Leader: The big chore in the morning is getting the truck loaded. It's a job for fast riders because they will be the last to leave camp in the morning.

Vegetarian Specialist/Salad Chef: We have a salad and vegetarian option with each dinner.

Crew Chief/Staff Liaison: A role for those with attention to detail. See left-hand column.
